The Backh-Greaby house is a three bay, three storey framed house, with a two bay, three storey framed wing to the south east, having continuous principal (north east) fronts and partly-continuous gabled roof-lines. The house is two rooms deep, and the ring is but one room deep. A shee-reofed one storey addition behind the wing completes the rectangle.

Exterior walls are covered with rather wide plain weatherboarding; weatherboarding of the third storey is slightly narrower. First and second storey windows are 6/6; rear third storey windows are 3/3 but front third storey windows are single casements containing panes arranged as a Chinese inspired fret in imitation of coursed ashlar. All windows have louvred blinds. The front fornice is supported by simple scrolled brackets, but brackets are amitted on the rear. A single chimney rises through the front roof slope of the main house, adiacent to the wing, but the matching rear chimney has been removed. An external chimney rises on the Southeast end of the wing, of 20th century construction.

A side hall extends along the northwest end of the main house, with doors front and rear. An open staircase with moderately massive turned walnut newels and round walnut rail to match, rises to the third floor. Balusters at the third storey level are plain rectangular, but those below are tapered, round replacements.

Two rooms are to the left or southeast of the hall, and the wing contains one room. All interior finishes and details are of the 20th wentury, but some original doors remain with modern boarding applied to each side. Detailed photographs taken before and during a massive 20th century restyling of the interior indicate sawn wood lathe and very simple beader trim, characteristic of the mid-19th century. The owner recalls hearing of an inscription "redone 1857", discovered behind the finishes during this 20th century remodeling.

Ca. 1957 is a date consistent with the three storey form and simple Italianate details of the house in its present form, and as deduced from the pre-modeling photos. Only a slight change in the character of the weatherboarding, not enough to suggest a deliberate variation to delineate the storey, suggests that the third attrey might have been added to an earlier house; of course, it if was an addition, it might have closely followed the initial construction. Examination of the corner posts, not possible at this time, should insicate if the complete three storey height is original or not. Roof rafters are mittered at the riage, a typical detail of the second half of the 19th ceatury.

The stone walled cellar extenss beneath the southeast wing, and continues without joints at the same front-to-back width under the morth-east or front portion of the main house. The first floor structure does not reflect this partial-cellar scheme; a girder beneath the dividing partition, not above a cellar wall, breaks the joist span. All joist structure of the main house is straight sawn, dimensional material. First floor joists of the wing are legs, hown flat on their top sides.

The 1798 Federal Direct Tax escribes a framed one storey swelling standing on this property 20 feet square "eld, much out of repair." The dimensions of the wing are 20 by 20 and the log juists may suggest, but do not conclusively prove, that this wing contair. Portions of an earlier structure. The lack of joints in the cellar walls suggests that the (conjectured) earlier structure was moved over a new, enlarged cellar.

	Significance o

Perhaps the concept of the addition was enlarged between the digging and walling of the cellar and the framing of the new house above.

The main sills and corner posts of the wing have been seen recently, and are hown with mertise and tenen joints. No hand wrought mails have been identified as yet, which would indicate that the remains of the structure assoribed on this property in 1798 may remain.

The simensions of the principal portion of the existing awelling are approximately 28 by 32 feet.

Behind the kitchen wing stands a stone, one storey square meat house with a pyramidal roof. The door is not original and the roof structure is not accessible for inspection, so no positive determination could be made as to its age; however, there was a meat house noted in the 1798 Federal Direct Tax, which may be the existing one.

stones of Mizebeth Bacon, the wife of the second Martin Bacon, who sied in 1821, age 3C, and the mother of William, John and Ellen Bacon Stewart. In addition, there is the stone of a son of Martin and Elizabeth Bacon, whose name cannot be identified.

The present owners are Dr. and Mrs. A.M.N. Crosby.
